A highly sought after successful business woman, land developer, Owner of Blackstone Alliance Corporation 501c3, Graciela Blackstone is currently serving as a Queen of Development for the Country of Ghana, Africa for 3 million people to give Waste to Energy, Clean Water, Green Energy, Infrastructure , and Community initiative construction contract inclusions.

Graciela provides essential guidance to companies and small business owners, by facilitating their transformation from transactional thinking into strategic process development. These concepts allow them to develop the critical elements needed to transform their focus from daily transactions to the more important aspects of growth and innovation. Taking a huge risk and setting up shop in Annapolis and Crownsville, she began her direct communication with civic and community business leaders. By identifying the large facility deficits, and bottom line tax losses, the best in their field qualified STEAM location at 1820 Hall Brown Road in Crownsville include a who's who of today's local authorities including South River Federation, General's Highway Council, Annapolis City Council, Senator Reilly, Delegate Cathy Vitale, Annapolis Mayor, Anne Arundel County EDC, and AACO Zoning. Within 6 years, she successfully developed the first Amphitheater for Humanity and Conference Center in the area. Seeking a bigger challenge to enhance her business, she entered her project online for Angel Investors. The Project caught wind of Growthink owner JT Foxx and English business magnate and philanthropist Sir Richard Branson and Graciela was invited to Los Angeles to speak about this unique location in Annapolis Maryland. This project was one of the first in recent business history that celebrated American Commerce as Business Humanitarianism. Due to the establishment of her family's farm location in 1659, her true passion to show Capitalism in a new light was born. The farm location was identified by Professor Leone of University of Maryland who personally authenticated the site as the first location where commerce (buying, bartering, and selling) began in this country. This commerce leveraged the power of today's business culture for exponential growth in revenue in this sector of Maryland to include the historic and beautiful Crofton community of Anne Arundel County. After speaking in Los Angeles, Graciela was given a rare opportunity to share details of this unique location with many wealthy and influential individuals including JT Foxx, Eric Trump, Steve Wozniak and Michael Irvin who recognized that this facility dedicated to the History of Business Commerce was an ideal venue for their personal foundations and charity events. Many large business owners are looking to book their conventions at the Amphitheatre to take advantage of the Amphitheater's Conference Center tax advantages. Revenue will provide as much as 30% increase to local tourism and promote business awareness. With this easy, almost effortless "done for you" system, tourism will expand to Crofton shopping district serviced by the Amphitheater tour buses which is included with the conference packages. Graciela grasped her experience 30 years ago as a CEO for A & G Cleaning Corporation that won the bid for Camden Yards and participated as minority contractor for 3 years with honorable production of 45 employees. She was asked to handle Memorial Stadium by Maryland Stadium Authority Deputy Director- Ed Kline for the Baltimore Stallions CFL team before the Ravens were developed. She had a restaurant " Cafe Distinction " in downtown Baltimore and operated as a licensed landscaper and electrician with Union 26 and was a Volunteer Fire Fighter for 10yrs. at Station 29 in Jessup graduating from the AACO Fire department FF3 and EMTB. She Served in the United States Army from 1975 – 2005. She is currently authoring a new book " Business Humanitarianism, the Rebirth of Capitalism" and is providing new concepts to green businesses and farmers to help increase their gross revenue as well as helping several businesses through the startup process. The Amphitheater focuses on the baby boomer generation who have had a difficult time transitioning into the technology age and will provide an International Carrier Center providing clearance jobs from $60k to $10m per year with fortune 500 Corporations, many of whom will hold their conventions at the Blackstone Amphitheater. This project has been awarded a citation for being a valued asset that most find easy to utilize and take actions on to achieve great success. Voted a law House Bill 559, the Amphitheater for Humanity passed across the board with the General Assembly. Graciela is a proud AACO 5th generation farmer with an out of the box concept.

Chandini Kumar Portteus, MPH
President and Chief Executive Officer

Chandini Portteus is the Founder and Chief Executive Officer of the Portteus Consulting Group, a firm that provides strategic business solutions for organizations of all sizes, across all areas of the business, both for-profit and non-profit. She is sought out by business executives and board leaders for advising, guidance and hands on direction to create vision and strategy, implement business plans and redirect or expand organizational activities. Her colleagues within the group come from different areas of expertise and are highly experienced and esteemed in their fields. They provide advising and fractional leadership, from their decades of expertise and leadership across many areas of business. As a team, they are able to provide solutions for organizations who need an efficient way to engage seasoned leaders, not only with demonstrated success, but also integrity and a clear priority for ethics. Having a fractional senior team as needed, allows for seamless communication, and a transparent culture of true collaboration to meet the needs of any client.

In her most recent consulting roles, Chandini provided senior executive leadership in various roles, some held simultaneously. She most recently served as a fractional leader in the technology field, serving as the President and CEO of a technology tech start-up. Her work was to promote and prepare the company for capital raise, through re-branding, team structuring and tech adjustments for optimal market release, Improving upon the patented technology, she was asked for her hands on leadership to assist a less experienced founder, a model becoming more frequently requested and more than just mentoring. Simultaneously, she served as the Chief Strategy Officer and Technology Officer, for a female founded start-up that required immediate changes in order to reach milestones necessary for success. This required Chandini's honed talents in staffing change management and strategic redirection to remove barriers to progress. She hired teams that would lead to fast paced deliverables to achieve success and subsequent funding.

Notably, also through her consultancy capacity, Chandini was asked to serve as the President and Executive in Residence (XIR) for Empowering a Billion Women, Inc., a global for-profit tech company that connects women to opportunities through its networking forums and digital tools and training. Chandini led the Inc.'s strategy, operations and fundraising, and worked with EBW's clients and its chapters both domestic and global. While with EBW, she lent her talent and expertise from decades in the non-profit sector, to assist the team of the EBW Foundation, to meet the mission of serving women and girls globally. Chandini's passion for leadership and proven record of success led her to fill a critical gap she saw facing many start-ups. While working globally with blue chip clients seeking entrepreneurs, she recognized a lack of executive expertise, especially for those starting ventures at a young age, for females, or for global citizens. Her abilities and past experiences as a strategic fundraiser and growth catalyst were much needed for both mentorship, fractional leadership, and to serve as an executive to assist ventures beat the odds to launch and scale their ideas into profit, even when beginning in limited resource environments.

She brings to each role her business acumen, honed during various glass shattering executive leadership roles, be it her entrepreneurial work as a C level officer and strategist for start-ups, to her globally known work as a reputable CEO in the non-profit sector. Inherent to her leadership style and scope over decades, Chandini is a seasoned global leader with eye for scale, and expansion through her work both domestically and in global and emerging markets. In addition, Chandini also serves in roles as facilitator, speaker, convener and panelist on topics ranging from her expertise in cancer or leadership, to her experiences as a young female executive, or her role as a mother of four children, undoubtedly her favorite role of all.

In previous high-profile leadership roles, Chandini served as the growth expansion President & Chief Executive Officer of Wipe Out Kids' Cancer, doubling the revenue of the organization within six months, and working with her team to increase engagement and funding, meeting three-year milestones in merely eighteen months. During her tenure there, she received the coveted honor as one of the Dallas Business Journal's 40 Under 40, for her history of impact in the area of cancer. In a time of great need, Chandini was uniquely selected to be the crisis and turnaround President & Chief Executive Officer of the Livestrong Foundation, where she recruited and blended a seasoned team and was able to increase every revenue channel in less than a year. She was highly regarded for her work to grant a significant $50M gift to create and build the Livestrong Cancer Institutes at the Dell Medical School at the University of Texas.

Chandini's background in philanthropy began at Susan G. Komen for the Cure, where she oversaw a total of $2B spent in mission programming during her ten years with the well-known organization. Her oversight and portfolio of work came at a critical time in Komen's history, as it rose to its highest years of revenue, and also survived serious controversy, leading to revenue decline. Her leadership provided growth and stability through research funding, community health activation across 125 domestic affiliates, public policy leadership for the 501c3 and c4, and global programming in 33 countries. Chandini worked with all teams across the organization to fundraise multi-millions from over 250+ corporate partners and manage their investments to produce the greatest results in research and for patients with breast cancer. As the organization's very first Chief Mission Officer, she still remains the youngest seated Chief Officer in Susan G. Komen history, not only during the decade she served, but throughout the organization's near 40-year history.

As a seasoned executive and growth strategist, Chandini oversaw each organization's strategic direction with a fresh eye toward mission programming, stability in operations and innovations in fundraising. Having been chosen to lead organizations through and after times of public controversy, Chandini is a reputable and globally recognized for her demonstrated success and specialization in crisis, change and turnaround situations and for her ability to bring catalytic growth to organizations. Despite any challenge, her focus was always to improve the lives of individuals, impacting communities nationally & globally and transform current systems through new models of change, many involving tech or leapfrogging strategies. Prior to her work in cancer, she worked in many areas of health and research, ranging from epidemiology and biostatistical studies, addiction research, pediatric psychiatry, population health, clinical trials, and the pharmaceutical industry.

Chandini has served and currently resides on numerous advisory groups, boards and national councils. She has a vast portfolio of press and publications and has appeared across nearly every major press channel, either broadcast or print, through her presence as a contributor, expert advisor, a featured woman to watch or as in interest story highlighting the mission or corporations she has served. She has been the recipient of numerous awards throughout her academic and professional career and received recognition and financial scholarships for her academic achievement during her educational years. Chandini was also recognized for her civic leadership through volunteerism, which began at the age of fourteen and continues to this day.

While well connected and respected globally, her roots in the research and medical community began in Texas. After working in the pharmaceutical industry, she served as a member of research teams at UT Southwestern Medical School, Children's Medical Center, Parkland Hospital, and the UT School of Public Health. She is a graduate of Austin College, and the School of Public Health at the University of Texas. Chandini was born in Chennai, India and moved to the United States with her parents at a young age and became a citizen of the US in her twenties. While she works internationally, she resides in Dallas, Texas, with her four children.
